

Abstract

The study tried to use two theories (external memory theory, O'Regan, 1992 and visual memory theory Henderson and Hollingworth, 2002) from studies on change blindness to apply to spatial difference comparison and tried to contrast the difference between difference comparison and change detection. The two paradigms were found to be similar across different difficulty but the two theories could not explain the result totally.